the manner in which Hongkong is through the Legislative Council likelihood come before Home Authorities for consideration, it C. Goolamboosin, and H. N. Bhanja. On the may be desirable to notice the main point application of Mr. Dennys, representing Mr. at which it fails, as compared with an ad- Francis, for defendant, the case was adjourned ministration at home. The Hon. Mr. Austin recently drew an analogy between the Governor and the official members, and the Prime Minister and the Cabinet at home, pointing out that it was as essential that the official members should give their support to every measure which the Government was desirous of introducing, as that the Ministers at home should support their chief. This is no doubt quite true; but there are two points and close up his shop. He had always heard in which the case here differs materially from that with which it is compared. If the public are not contented with a Prime Minister they can get another; but unfortunately instructions in the matter. There were a lot in Hougkong, we must accept the measures of the Governor for the time being, whether primanded complainant, recommanding him to we approve of themor not. This is one very learn something of his duty. great and very obvious difference, but there is another, which, though less apparent, is equally important. At home the Members a-on, standing on the staircase in the house; of the Cabinet form an active element in it. Their opinions have to be taken into very careful consideration by their chief, and although he takes the lead in all measures which are brought forward, he is unable to carry out any measure to which any of his colleagues have a very marked objection. Minor differences are of course sunk in view did on the 4th December unlawfully assault of the great necessity for concerted action; and beat the complainant. but if any of the members of the Cabinet differ with the Prime Minister upon an important question, the result is that they re- brought the letter back, and refused to take it sign, and that the Cabinet is reconstructed, again. He had to get another coolie to take possibly to the extent of the Prime Minister then got angry, and kicked at complainant, but himself being ousted from office. When the mistakes which are made are at last discovered, or perhaps, more accurately speaking, exposed, steps are taken by the Home Authorities to remedy them as far as possible, but nothing is done towards effectually preventing their recurrence. The Colonial Office may take it for granted that the government of Hongkong will continue nothing better than the patching up of a series of gigantic blunders, so long as the co-operation of the public continues to be spurned as it is at present. A shocking murder, which appears to bave taken place on Sunday night, was discovered yesterday, in the nonth of London. The Rev. John Selby Watson was for many years the head master of Stockwell Grammar School, and author of several popular works of biography. For some time past the school has not been in a very flourishing state, and it is supposed that may have contributed to sour his timper. On Sunday night his domestic servant had leave of absence, leaving Mr. and Mrs. Watson together; on her return Mr. Watson told her her mistress had gone into the country. On Tuesday, he produced some poison, as he thought it was, and swallowed it, leaving letters behind him, in which he stated that he had murdered his wife in a fit of ungovernable fury. On the letters being opened, search was made, and the unfortunate old lady was found in a corner of a room crouched together, and her skull complotely battered in. When Mr. Watson recovered from the stopor into which he was thrown by the drug he had taken, he was taken into custody.. The Prince of Wales, though mable to be present, was the patron of the evenin , and among the fashionable audience crowding every corner of the building many paid from one to five guineas for places. and in one case £30 was chresfully given for a private box. A kindred feeling for the unhapby members of his art, who in the decline of life suffer from the pance of adversity, induced Mr. Sothern to devote the earnings of his final performance to the Royal General Theatrical Fund. It was altogether a great night for so popular an notor. The Era suys: The house was filled in every corner, even the orchestra, instead of echoing the notes of fiddle,

THE JAPANESE REVOLUTION. (Alla.)

Several weeks ago we called attention in an editorial article to late changes in the constitu tion of Japan, but we have since learned that they are greater than we then knew-to great that they indicate the most remarkable peaceful revolution in a populous empire, on record, We do not pretend, however, to be even yet Hongkong Distillery Company-10 per cent. fully informed; the latest Japanese papers received here have only vague inklings of what has been going on, and the foreigners generally in Yokohama are in serious doubt in regard to Hongkong Pier and Godown Company,-10 many points.

With all the difficulties, however, in getting information, we think we can safely say that the government has been altered from a despotism to a constitutional monarchy; that the title and functions of the sovereign bave been changed; that a popular Parliament has been instituted; that the federal nobles who overshadowed the crown have been deprived of most of their wealth and hereditary power and that the Cabinet is making the most earnest efforts to introduce the most approved methods of procedure in all the branches of the administration. Such reforms, undertaken by a nation of 50,000,000 people, and carried through in peace within the short space of five years, are entirely unexampled.

The latest accounts attribute much of the order and success of the Japanese political progress to the example of Stotebashi, the late Tycoon, who, when his enemies resorted to force to overthrow him, consented to the destruction of his dynasty, not on condition of some personal gain for himself, but if the nobles would promise to establish liberal institutions. This promise was given, and seems to have been kept, although the reforms have gone too far to suit many of the nobles; and perhaps the danger of disturbance is not yet entirely past.

Under the old system the chief nobles were bereditury governors of the three hundred and odd provinces, and the owners of nearly all the revenues of the empire, while the Tycoon and Mikado were supported to a great extent by contributions, which were regarded as presents. As sureties for the fidelity of the nobles, each has to send a near relative as hostage to be kept by the Tycoon. After the abrogation of the Tycoonste, the Imperial authority, was vested in the official who had been the Mikado or Spiritual Emperor, but the title of his office has been changed to Tenno, and there is no longer a Mikado. The first want of a good Government is a secure revenue, and Satsuma, Chosiu, Toza and Hizen, the four leading Princes, offered to transfer their entire revenues to the Orown. The Tenno accepted the offer, but returned to them oneeighth. Seven-eights of the revenues of other nobles were also taken. The annual regenue of the Imperial Government is now estimated

Parliament, which deprived the leading nobles | Style or Firm of E. VINCENT & Co. of the hereditary right to the governorship of the provinces in which their families have been established for conturies. Henceforth. the Governors are to be appointed by the crown, and the Tenno-bas exercised his power by appointing several civilians, to the great disgust of the displaced nobles. We have not been able to learn in what manner the Parliament is constituted, but its overthrowing one of the chief privileges of the powerful nobility, indicates that the middle class at least is well represented. These are the main points of the revolution, so far as we have been able to learn them; but date. they are accompanied by other facts indicative of a revolutionary spirit. The Japaness people are trying to learn European languages, and become familiar with European modes of thought; Japanese students are numerous in American and European colleges; and European and American artisans, engineers and professional men of experience and reputation, are invited and employed at high salaries by the Government to assist in tenching the people of Japan the various useful arts as practiced in the capitals of Christendom. Physicians, military officers, professors of agriculture, geology and mining, and officers familiar with the workings of a constitutional government are sent for : and the men obtained are generally distinguished in their several branches. The steamships, the railroad, the telegraph, the best patterns of breech-loading firearms, and many other of the most valuable productions of modern skill are already naturalized by these enterprising islanders. Japan is advancing with a speed unexampled among beather na-

Some other names ought to be thought of; but these come at once to the recollection of every one. And of these, with the doubtful exception of Turenne, it may be safely-predicated that they were intellectual men, and would probably have been eminent in other departments of life. Casar was an ardent lover of gaiety and pleasure, but he never neglected his studies. He perfected himself in those intellectual acquirements and exercises which enabled him to muster whatever subject he was pursuing. He read the works of the best Greek historians, and attended the lectures of philosophers and rhetoricians. He spent much of his time with the army, but he had so qualified himself for political life, that he united in his own person the attributes of a statesman and a general. So, also, when Napoleon returned triumphant to Paris after his first Italian campaign, he abandoned the dress o his profession and adopted the costume of the Institute (the Philosophical Society) of Paris, and, shunning military acq aintances, lived mostly with the scientific men of his time. "Men," said he, "are governed by THREE first-class two story GODOWNS, superiority of intellectual qualities; and | situate on Inland lot No. 73, opposite none are more sensible of this than the Fletcher & Co.'s old premises, at present in oc- FIRE to the extent of $60,000 on any one First FIRE Undersigned having been appointed military profession" The late Duke of cupation of the Military. Wellington is another example of high powers of mind brought to bear upon military affairs. It is true that in early life he gave no proof of remarkable abilities.
